Andrea Hansen has an inability to control her musical urges. Though she is a member of the dark, angular, surging rock group Icewater Scandal, she still has so much she wants to do that it cannot be contained within just one group. From her fertile mind and nimble fingers comes her new work under the nom de plume of Painting Soldiers.

Most of her work was recorded in a small one room apartment, on a lonely block above a gun shop and behind the old New York City police headquarters. With just her guitar and a four-track recorder (and the occasional helping hand from various friends including Lee Ranaldo) Andrea has been able to unleash her talent and imagination that is clear and unadorned. Without all the studio trickery these songs stand out by themselves; their inner charisma is allowed to shine.

From the gentle rollicking of "Heaven And Mars" which slips in under the minute mark to the stormy psychedelic "Mighty Fumble" this EP stands by itself. This debut 12 inch is sure to transport the listener into an existence that transcends the common and everyday while never being let loose from the confines of that one room where it was conceived. Please note the b-side of this EP as it is an etched illustration by the NYC based artist Anthony Vitale.

Even strangers who have got a taste of their practice sessions from the street have complimented them. The six piece Convoy continue to come up with new songs that demand being put onto vinyl making it a golden opportunity to start your own dance party wherever you want. Organic Grooves remixes one of the pieces shooting Artanker into an even higher orbit.

But this EP is not only for the floor cutting set. It is layered with a multitude of different influences and experience that set this group apart from the typical club ravers, they compose pieces that allow them to really stretch out and continue to evolve the more they play them. You can sit back and just enjoy this, but your body might have different ideas.
